Shocking 'art': Disney characters are used in pro-Israel propaganda

Is this really necessary?

BY CATRIONA HARVEY-JENNER | PUBLISHED: 31 JULY 2014

An artist, who also describes himself as an activist has used Disney characters in order to create pro-

Israeli propaganda about the Palestinian political party Hamas, in the midst of the Middle Eastern conflict that is currently occurring in the Gaza strip. AleXsandro Palombo has created disturbing images of

Jasmine and Aladdin acting as terrorists and holding other Disney

Princesses captive, reflective of the bloody warfare that is ensuing between Israel and Palestine.

Among the images are various snippets of text, including the protests 'Stop Hamas', 'Stop Terrorism', and 'Once upon a time in Palestine'. In the explanation that goes alongside his 'art', AleXandro describes his work as an "original awareness campaign" designed to make people "meditate" on recent events. He apparently intended to create the "powerful series" to encourage people to reflect "on the devastating problem of terrorism that affects Israel and Palestine and on child soldiers." But what is missing from this explanation is balance; it's all about stopping the 'terrorism' with no mention of a bigger picture.

Using images of well-known, and well-loved characters of a certain ethnicity and labelling them 'terrorists' is fuelling the prejudiced, and inaccurate, assumption that all Palestinians are violent, and that all Israelis are innocent victims. The reality is much more blurred than that, and the situation is not aided by biased portrayals like this.
